

Founding Fathers of Pakistan

بانیانِ پاکستان

Between 1847 and 1948 a small number of men argued a country into existence — in treatises, law reports, pamphlets, newspapers, poetry and speeches. Among them were a district judge, a High Court barrister, a philosopher-poet, two nawabs of the Aligarh trust, a hereditary Imam, a pair of brothers who ran a newspaper, and a student at Cambridge who coined the name. They disagreed with one another, frequently and in print.

This is their writing, gathered and read in place. Each figure opens to a life and a shelf; each work opens to its own page, with an introduction and the document itself. Nothing here is summarised in place of being shown.
